KANHA NATIONAL PARK

Kanha National Park is one of India's 2 largest parks, covering 1945 kms of pristine Indian wilderness. Situated in the Maikal Hills of the Satpura range, Kanha boasts a spectacular landscape of vast Sal tree forests, interspersed with flourishing green meadows and beautiful stretches of lush bamboo growth. This national park is one of the first nine tiger reserves established with the initial launch of Project Tiger in 1973, aimed at protecting tigers and their ecosystems. Kanha is prime tiger wilderness, and it remains Project Tiger's success story.

FLORA

The forest is mixed and given the high rainfall precipitation one finds extensive stretches of sal, Crocodile Bark, Madhuca Indica, Arjun (distinct or its pale bark and thick girth), Axle wood (locally referred to as Dhaoda) and Flame of the forest or Palas a glorious sight in the drier season when flowering. Evergreen trees like Mango and Jamun are also found. Bamboo thickets are common and rolling meadows of grass and grassy plateau are integral for the herbivore population.

FAUNA

Kanha National park is one of India's largest parks and has a rich variety of wildlife such as tiger, gaur, sambhar, chital, barasingha, barking deer, chousingha, nilgai, sloth bear, jackal fox, porcupine, hyena, jungle cat, python, pea fowl, hare, monkey, mongoose, tiger and leopard.

With over 300 recorded bird species. Kanha is a bird watcher's paradise – species include storks, teals, pintails, pond herons, egrets, peacocks, pea fowl, jungle fowl, spur fowl, partridges, quails, green pigeons, cuckoos, rollers, bee-eater, hoopoes, drongos, warblers, kingfishers, woodpeckers, finchs, orioles, owls and fly catchers.
